THE HORSE CASE.

SUPERIOR COURT.

Before his Honor Judee Monerief.

Fr. 12, 1864.—88-reiff Kelly vs. Rostrand.—This trial was resumed, being the fourth day. Several veterinary surgeons of New York and Hrooklyn were examined, and such a sprinkiling of the professionals in horsettesh was seidom or very seen in a courf of just ce, myself and friend being eye-witnesses, going there to hear the case. The different direct and cross-examinations of the above named professionals were very interesting, and there was one above all the rest who gave the most satisfactory evidence I ever heard in a sourt of justice or anywhere else. The cross-examination by Edwin James of this veterinary surgeon, having a very large practice, both in contracts and also private practice, and the local to the jury the way to secure the head of the borse, and also the proper way to cast the horse; and he told Mr. James that in fact He never cast a house at all, unless it was to use the scalpel for very deep-scated operations, such as pole evil, deep seated tumors, castrations, &c. Mr. James had in fact He never cast a house at all, unless it was to use the scalpel for very deep-scated operations, such as pole evil, deep seated tumors, castrations, &c. Mr. James is a smart man and a good lawyer, we have no doubt; but his witness took him (Mr. James Felcan of the proper way to throw the horse was not over the such as the same of the such of the proper way to throw the horse was not over the large witness. Thirty years ago, in York-shre, England, said be, there were six cold for castration, and the man that castrated those animals threw them with two hobbles, and five out of the six dislocated the lumber vertebue, and three died, and the other two were destroyed on the third way after the operation. He also told the unper vertebue, and three died, and the other two were destroyed on the third way after the operation. He also told the unper vertebue, and three died, and the other two were destroyed on the third way after the operation. He also to werebow, and three died, and the other 'wo were destroyed on the third 'asy after the operation. He also told the jury that if a person had not got the horse's head preperly secured and made fast, the said person, whomsoever it might be, had no control over his carcase. He told, also, unto Mr. James and to the Court, that having no power over the head of the horse was like a captain being at sea having his ship under full sail, and having no power over the rudder, the ship would seen go to destruction; and so would the horse if a man has got no command of the horse's head. This witness' evidence was superior to anything we ever heard in orout of a court. He actually told the consel that he ought to know better than to ask such foolish questions as he was then asking (the counsel, James, asking some foolist thing); and it is erroneous on your part, says this witness (clusting a roar of laughter, in, which every person joined). If there ever is another horse irrid we will not miss the opportunity of going to hear it, especially if Mr. Edwin James and this shrewd, clever and qualified witness, should happen to be in the case. timity of going to hear it, especially it ar. Edwin James and this shrewd, clever and qualified witness, should happen to be in the case.

N. B.—The counsel for the plaintiff, Mr. Vanderpool, asked this witness if he had an irrtable and nervous horse, after taking him into the backsmith's shop, awoulding Said the above witning with him a nervous here, finding I could do not should be backsmith's shop, awould be said the above witness, and he nervous here, finding I could do not be subdued, I would not him into the stable and let in the stable that the should be said to be subdued, I would not him into the stable and let in the stable that the stable and let in the stable some part of this man's evidence above all the rast, because it was given in a candid and superior manner, and he answered Mr. James in such cute and clever terms that it put the whole court in a roar of laughter at the different quantums and answers, given as they were by the above witness. Whoever subp reach him ought to be proud of such a witness, as at the conclusion of his evidence there were upwards of twenty gentlemen who came forward and shook him by the hand, and told him, before the court, that he was a clever fellow, which lowered Mr. James agms feet. The case resulted, after this lengthy trial, by the complainant being nonsuited, upon an objection that one of the partners of the defendant was not made a co-defendant. Whether there will be a new trial we have not beard. N. B., we will find the name and address of the above named witness, as we mean to call and have an interview with him, and will insert the little process.
